public speaking practice tool

You need the most work in pace. Here are some tips to help:

Try to slow your delivery to a conversational rate. If you speak too quickly, your audience will not be able to process the meaning of what you are presenting. An overly fast rate of speech may also suggest to your audience that all you care about is to deliver your speech and return to your seat. Neither is an effective means of presenting your material. Mark your key-word outline with single slashes (/) for a brief pause for instance, at the ends of sentences, or with double slashes (//) for longer pauses for instance, to make a serious point or to mark a main point in the body of your testimonials

"VoiceVibes has been a helpful tool in my public speaking class because of the immediate, objective feedback. Since students are able to see a detailed critique of each submission of their work, there can be dramatic improvement in a student's performance in a very short amount of time."

Claire Hall, Instructor
Virginia Tech | Department of Communication

"VoiceVibes requires that students practice their speeches to improve their delivery. This requirement goes a long way towards reducing speech anxiety and making students more aware of other aspects of their speeches, especially organization and timing."

Dr. Elaine Vander Clute, Department Head
